The Masai

The Masai are an African tribe. Most of them live in the country of Kenya, but groups of Masai also live in other parts of east Africa, including north Tanzania. There are many other African tribes but, for many people, the Masai are the best-known. They are famous for their bright red clothing and their ceremonies that include lots of music and dancing. Probably, one of the most colourful ceremonies is the festival of "Eunoto". This is a ceremony when the teenage boys of the Masai become men.

"Eunoto" lasts for many days and Masai people travel across the region to get to a special place near the border between Kenya and Tanzania. The teenage boys who travel with them are called 'warriors'. This is a traditional name from the past when young men fought with other tribes. Nowadays, these warriors spend most of their time looking after their cattle.

 At the beginning of the ceremony, the teenagers paint their bodies. Meanwhile, their mothers start to build a place called the "Osingira". It is a special room in the middle of the celebrations. Later, the older men from different tribes sit inside this place and, at different times, the boys go inside to meet them. Later in the day, the boys run around the "Osingira", going faster and faster each time. It is another important part of the ritual.
 The teenagers also have to change their appearance at "Eunoto". Masai boys' hair is very long before the ritual but they have to cut it off. In Masai culture, hair is an important symbol. For example, when a baby grows into a child, the mother cuts the child's hair and gives the child a name. And so, at Eunoto, the teenage boy's mother cuts his hair off at sunrise.
