Greenland is the largest island in the world but has a small population of 56,000 people. Many of these 'Greenlanders' live close to the coastline because a large part of the country is covered with ice. A quarter of all the people live in the capital, Nuuk. Now life is going to change for many Greenlanders – and all because of the weather.

Most scientists agree that the world's climate is getting warmer and you can already see the difference in Greenland. For example, small icebergs – about the size of city buses – are floating near to the coast. They have broken off from much larger areas of ice further out in the ocean because of the change in temperature. If all of Greenland's ice melts, sea levels across the world will rise by 7.5 metres.

Farming will also change. Springs will arrive earlier and summers will be longer and drier. But some farmers are worried. They think the drier summers may create new problems. For example, last summer was so dry that farmers didn't produce the normal amount of food. There is a traditional song about the importance of summer in a place where in the past, winters were long and summers were short. If the weather changes in Greenland, maybe, in one hundred years people will not sing this song.

Summer, summer,
how wonderful How incredibly good.
The frost is gone,
The frost is gone ...
