Europe is home to a large number of exciting music festivals that revolve around rock, rap, reggae, classical and even country music. For families, however, not all these festivals are appropriate. Large crowds or adult subject matters can make them inappropriate for young children. Thankfully, there is a number of exciting family-friendly music festivals in Europe that are perfect for children of all ages. Read on for one of the top seven festivals in Europe that is good for families.

This exciting festival takes place each year between July 11–15 along the border of Dorset and Wiltshire in England. Parents will appreciate the great discounts available for children's tickets. While adults pay £190 for the week-long festival, children aged 11–17 will pay just £155, children between the ages of 5–10 will pay £130 and anyone under the age of 4 is completely free. Camping is included within the ticket price and special areas of the campsite are devoted to families. In these areas the overall volume is lower and the late-night partying is limited. Children will love the music shows meant to them, special puppetry workshops and even crafting sessions for children of all ages.

- 1 You can find a lot of music festivals in Europe.
- 2 Not all the festivals are good for children.
- 3 They held an exciting festival in Wiltshire.
